What Happened to the Nun Maitreyī? by Ann Heirman

Journal of the International Association of Buddhist Studies, Vol. 23, No. 1 2000
What Happened to the Nun Maitreyī?

One of the precepts for Buddhist monks stipulates that a monk commits a saṃghāvāsesa offense if he accuses another monk of an unfounded pārājika offense. The introductory story preceding the precept relates why this precept has been laid down: two monks are angry with the venerable monk Darva Mallaputra (Pāli: Dabba Mallaputta) and they want to see him removed. They convince the nun Maitreyī (Pāli: Mettiyā) to help them, whereupon she accuses Darva of having an impure conduct and of having raped her (= a violation of the first pārājika precept). The Buddha, however, does not believe her and, after having heard Darva’s defense, he starts an investigation against the two monks. Thereupon, the two admit to have incited Maitreyī to accuse Darva. The Buddha then lays down a precept whereby he stipulates that a monk who accuses another monk of an unfounded pārājika, commits a saṃghāvāsesa. The question what happened to the nun Maitreyī remains however. She too accused a monk of an unfounded pārājika.

The introductory story preceding the above precept in the Pāli Vinaya says that the Buddha wanted Mettiyā to be expelled: “tena hi bhikkhave Mettiyam bhikkhunim nāsetha” (Vin, Vol.III, pp.162,38-163,1). This statement created many discussions as to how to interpret it. U. HÜSKEN (1997: 96-98) points to the fact that the procedure of expulsion cannot have been based on any fixed rule of the Vinaya since, until the precept had been laid down, no regulation prohibiting monks or nuns from accusing another of having committed a pārājika offense existed. The

2. saṃghāvāsesa, Pāli saṃghādisesa, and variants: an offense leading to a temporary exclusion from the Buddhist order.
3. pārājika, and variants: an offense leading to a definitive exclusion from the Buddhist order.
4. The introductory story is analogous in all the Vinayas, except for the Mahā.
first wrong-doer is not punished, but only induces the Buddha to formulate a new precept. Moreover, the expulsion of Mettiyā is, in any case, not (legally) justified since a false accusation constitutes a saṃghādisesa offense and not a pārājika (leading to an expulsion). Therefore, U. HÜSKEN concludes that her expulsion “must be regarded as an exception, made possible through the personal intervention of the Buddha.” The term ‘nāsētha’ is thus not used as a technical term. U. HÜSKEN (1997: 102-105) further refers to the Samantapāsādikā, a commentary on the Pāli Vinaya,¹ Sp 582,30-584,9. The passage concerned reports a controversy between the Abhayagirivāsins and the Mahāvihāravāsins on the actual reason of Mettiyā’s expulsion. Was it because of her (false) statement (Abhayagiri) or because of another reason (Mahāvihāra). According to the author of the Samantapāsādikā, experts considered the latter view to be the right one. In that case, the question remains, however, what kind of offense Mettiyā was actually accused of. According to the Samantapāsādikā, it cannot have been a saṃghādisesa offense since the precept on the false accusation is valid only for nuns with respect to other nuns¹ and for monks with respect to other monks, but not for nuns with respect to monks. Nor did she violate one of the pārājika precepts. In this way, she only can have committed an offense that is not sanctioned with an expulsion. Yet, she has been expelled. To this, the Samantapāsādikā says that she has been expelled because of her bad character, of which she herself was aware. The latter explanation is considered by U. HÜSKEN “to be a provisional solution.”

Also O. VON HINÜBER (1997: 87-91)⁸ gives an account of the controversy between the Abhayagirivāsins and the Mahāvihāravāsins. He too indicates that “at least at the time of the Samantapāsādikā, there was no ⁶ Although attributed to Buddhaghosa, the commentary is probably written by a different author in the fourth or the fifth century AD (O. VON HINÜBER 1996), A Handbook of Pāli Literature, Berlin, New York, Walter de Gruyter (Indian Philology and South Asian Studies 2), pp. 103-109).

---

The Pāli Vinaya and the Sarva do not mention those precepts that nuns have in common with the ones for monks. These precepts are, however, enumerated in the respective bhikṣuṇipratītimokṣas (Moniales and T.1437).

tangible legal argument in the Vinaya by which Mettiyā could have been expelled(!).” He further points to Sp 583,17 and Sp 584,3-5 that state that a monk who accuses a nun, and a nun who accuses a monk commit a dukkaṭa (Skt. duṣkṛta).9

The aim of this paper is to investigate (1) whether the other Vinaya traditions10 equally lead to a similar discussion and (2) whether, throughout the Vinayās, a monk who has offended (a monk or) a nun, and a nun who has offended (a nun or) a monk are judged analogously to the above outlined case?

1. What happened to Maitreyī in the Vinaya traditions that have survived in their Chinese translation?

All the Vinayās have a precept saying that a monk who accuses another monk of an unfounded pārājika offense, commits a saṃghāvaśeṣa offense.1* In all the Vinayās, except for the Mahā, the precept is introduced by the story of the two monks who, with the help of the nun Maitreyī, falsely accuse Darva Mallaputra of having had sexual intercourse with her. The Mahā does not mention a nun helping the angry monks.

In the Mahī, Maitreyī hesitates to help the monks, since she is afraid that she will be expelled after having confessed.11 It is not explicitly mentioned what she would confess (the sexual intercourse or the false accusation), but it seems to be the act of sexual intercourse since the two monks answer her that they will testify that Darva did wrong and not she, so that there is no reason to expel her. Nevertheless, Maitreyī still hesitates. She stays afraid that Darva’s expulsion will imply also her expulsion. Yet, she accuses him in order to help the two angry monks. Although the Buddha knows that she is telling a lie, he questions Darva about it. When Darva denies, the Buddha believes him. Whereas no

9. i.e. ‘wrong doing,’ a light offense.
10. Five Vinayās have survived in a Chinese translation: the MahīśāsakaVinaya (T.1421, Mahī), the MahāśāmghikaVinaya (T.1425, Mahā), the DharmaguptakaVinaya (T.1428, Dharma), the SarvāstivādaVinaya (T.1435, Sarvā and the MūlasarvāstivādaVinaya (T.1442 up to and including T.1451, Mūla [because of its size, the MūlasarvāstivādaVinaya is not edited in one work, but consists of a number of different works]). Of the latter Vinaya, there is also a Tibetan translation.
punishment is thus imposed on him, the nun Maitreyī is definitively expelled from the order with a jñapticaturtha karman\(^\text{12}\) (Mahī, p.15c25-26). She is expelled for having said that Darva had intercourse with her (Mahī, pp.15c26-16a3). When the two monks keep on saying that Darva had intercourse with Maitreyī, Darva is again questioned, and again he denies. Thereupon, the Buddha stipulates that a monk who accuses another monk of an unfounded pārājika, commits a samghāvaśeṣa. The commentary following upon the precept adds that a monk who accuses a nun, a probationer or a (male or female) novice commits a duṣkṛta, that a nun who accuses a monk commits a pācitti, and that a nun who accuses a probationer or a (male or female) novice commits a duṣkṛta (Mahī, p.16b14-17).

The above account leads to a discussion similar to the one mentioned in the Samantapāsādikā: there is no legal argument to expel only Maitreyī when she confesses that she has had sexual intercourse with Darva. If it is true, she and Darva should both be expelled (on account of the first pārājika). As the Buddha does not believe her, he, consequently, does not expel Darva. However, Maitreyī is expelled. This cannot be on account of her false accusation since, before the precept has been laid down, she cannot be punished. The first wrong-doer is never sanctioned. Moreover, once the precept has been laid down, if a nun falsely accuses a monk, her act constitutes a pācitti/ offense, which is never sanctioned with an expulsion.

The Dharma only mentions that Darva denies having committed a pārājika offense. It does not say what happened to the nun Maitreyī. No sanction is mentioned. Consequently, it is very doubtful that a discussion arose on the interpretation of a sanction imposed on her.

Finally, in the Sarva, the Buddha states that Maitreyī has to be expelled by means of a formal procedure because she herself says that she has committed a (pārājika) offense: 是彌多羅比丘尼自説作罪故應與滅羯磨 (p.22c9). In the Mūla, we find a similar statement: 友女苾芓尼自言犯罪應當滅羯 (p.696c26). In these two Vinayas, Maitreyī is thus expelled after having confessed a pārājika offense, even if the

12. A jñapticaturtha karman is a formal act consisting of one motion (jñapti), three propositions (karmavācana) that concern the acceptance of the motion by the assembly of monks or nuns, and a conclusion.

13. pācitti, Pāli pācittiya, and variants: an offense that must be expiated.
believed to be untrue. In this way, there seems to be no legal argument for the expulsion.

In addition, all the Vinaya traditions equally contain a precept saying that a nun who accuses another nun of an unfounded pārājika offense, commits a samghāvaśeṣa offense. The question what happens to a nun who accuses a monk of an unfounded pārājika offense, or to a monk who accuses a nun remains. In the Samantapāśādikā, it is said that a nun who accuses a monk, and a monk who accuses a nun commit a dukṣaṭa (Skt. duṣkṛta) (Sp 583,17 and Sp 584,3-5). The Mahā, p.16b14-17, states that a monk who accuses a nun commits a dukṣaṭa, but that a nun who accuses a monk commits a pācittika. The Mahā, p.281a2-3, says that a monk who accuses a nun of a pārājika or of a samghāvaśeṣa commits a pācittika. There is no information on a nun who accuses a monk. The Dharma, p.589a26-28 – i.e. in the commentary following upon the precept on the false accusation of a monk by another monk – says that a monk who accuses a nun of an unfounded pārājika (also) commits a samghāvaśeṣa. It adds that (also) a nun [in a similar situation] commits a samghāvaśeṣa: 比丘尼僧伽婆尸沙 (p.589b6). In my view, the latter statement is to be interpreted as ‘a nun who accuses a nun [or a monk] of an unfounded pārājika, commits a samghāvaśeṣa.’ This interpretation is confirmed by a precept for nuns: Dharma, p.718b12-15, samghāvaśeṣa 2: if a nun accuses someone of an unfounded pārājika offense, she commits a samghāvaśeṣa. The Sarva and the Mūla do not give any information on a monk who accuse a nun, or on a nun who accuses a monk.

We thus see that, although there seems to be no legal argument to expel Maitreyī, most Vinayas state that she is to be expelled. The Dharma does not impose a punishment upon her.

The above mentioned facts also show that

- only two Vinayas indicate which offense a nun commits when she accuses a monk: according to the Mahā, it is a pācittika; according to the Dharma, it is a samghāvaśeṣa (just as when she accuses a monk). The Samantapāsādikā supports the opinion that a nun commits a dukkata.

- the Pāli tradition, the Mahīśāsakas and the Mahāsāṃghikas judge a monk who accuses a monk and a monk who accuses a nun in a different way. This is not the case for the Dharmaguptakas for whom gender has no influence: regardless whether a monk accuses a monk or a nun, he commits a samghāvāsesa.

2. Is a monk who has offended a nun, and is a nun who has offended a monk judged analogously to the above outlined case throughout the Vinayas?

In order to answer this question, I will consider the other Vinaya precepts that (1) regard misbehavior towards a monk or a nun, with the exclusion of the precepts that involve a sexual relation between the two parties, and on which (2) relevant information is found concerning the judgment of a monk for having offended a monk, and of a nun for having offended a nun versus the judgment of a monk for having

16. A first investigation of the Dharma reveals that the category of precepts that involve sexual or physical contact is to be considered as a separate category with a proper logic: a monk sexually or physically involved with a woman is committing a more serious offense than a monk involved with a man; and a nun sexually or physically involved with a man is committing a more serious offense than a nun involved with a woman. There is one exception: a monk who has sexual intercourse with a man or with a woman commits a pārājika in both cases (bhikṣuvibhangā, pār. 1, p. 571a21-24; p. 571c11-12, 21-22). See bhikṣuvibhangā, sam. 2: a monk commits a sam. if he has physical contact with a woman (p. 580b28-29); he commits a duṣkṛta if he has physical contact with a man (p. 581a14); sam. 3: a monk commits a sam. if he talks about indecent items [the genital zone] to a woman (p. 581c1-2); he commits a duṣkṛta if he talks to a man (p. 581c25-26); sam. 4: a monk commits a sam. if he incites a woman to offer her body to him (p. 582b8-11); he commits a duṣkṛta if he incites a man (p. 582c1-2); sam. 5: a monk commits a sam. if he acts as a go-between between a man and a woman, or vice versa (p. 583a16-18); if he acts as a go-between between men, he commits a duṣkṛta (p. 584a1-2); bhikṣuvibhangā, pār. 1: a nun commits a pār. if she has sexual intercourse with a man (p. 714a14-15); there is no penetration possible between women who have a sexual relation, but the Dharma says that nuns who slap on one another’s vagina commit a pāc. (p. 738c11-12); pār. 5: a nun commits a pār. if she has physical contact with a man (p. 715b6-10); she commits a duṣkṛta if she has contact with a woman (p. 715c23-24); sam. 8: a nun commits a sam. if she accepts things from a man who is filled with desire (p. 721c22-24); she commits a duṣkṛta if she accepts things from a woman who is filled with desire (p. 722a6-7).
offended a nun, and of a nun for having offended a monk. In this way, we can examine four precepts:

1. a monk commits a samghāvāsesa if he uses a minor event\(^\text{17}\) to accuse a monk of an unfounded pārājika; a nun commits a samghāvāsesa if she uses a minor event to accuse a nun of an unfounded pārājika

The precept and the commentary following upon this precept are similar to the above mentioned case on the accusation of an unfounded pārājika:

- Pāli tradition: a monk who accuses a monk commits a *saṃ. (Vin, Vol.III, pp.167,38-168,7); the Pāli tradition does not give any further commentary; it is not unlikely, however, that the commentary on the preceding precept on the accusation of an unfounded pār also applies here.

- bhikkhunipātimokkha: a nun who accuses a nun commits a saṃ. (Moniales, p. 174).

- Mahiśāsakas: a monk who accuses a monk commits a saṃ. (Mahī, p.16c10-14); the commentary refers to the commentary following upon the preceding saṃ. (Mahī, p.16c20) – thus: a monk who accuses a nun commits a duśkṛta; a nun who accuses a nun commits a saṃ.; a nun who accuses a monk, commits a pāc.

- bhikṣuṇīvibhāṅga: a nun who accuses a nun commits a saṃ. (Mahī, p.79a29-b5)

- Mahāsāṃghikas: a monk who accuses a monk commits a saṃ. (Mahā, p.281b21-24); the commentary refers to the commentary following upon the preceding saṃ. (Mahā, p.281c8-9) – thus: a monk who accuses a nun commits a pāc.

- bhikṣuṇīvibhāṅga: a nun who accuses a nun commits a saṃ. (Mahā, p.517c8-12).

- Dharmaguptakas: a monk who accuses a monk commits a saṃ. (Dharma, p.589c12-16); the commentary adds that a monk who accuses a nun (also) commits a saṃ. (Dharma, p.590a27-29); it further says that (also) a nun [in a similar situation] commits a saṃ. (p.590b8).\(^\text{18}\) The latter commentary is possibly to be interpreted as: a nun who accuses a nun [or a monk] commits a saṃ.

- the bhikṣuṇīvibhāṅga, however, only mentions that a nun who accuses another nun, commits a saṃ. (Dharma, p.718b19-24).

- Sarvāstivādins: a monk who accuses a monk commits a saṃ. (Sarva, p.23c10-14).

17. A minor event that has no relation with a pārājika offense is deliberately misinterpreted in order to falsely accuse an innocent monk.

bhikṣunīpratimokṣa: a nun who accuses a nun commits a saṃ. (T.1437, p.480b4-8).

Mūlasarvāstivādins: a monk who accuses a monk commits a saṃ. (Mūla, p.699c24-28).

bhikṣunīvibhaṅga: a nun who accuses a nun commits a saṃ. (Mūla, p.934a9-13).

Similar conclusions can be drawn as with the preceding precept on the accusation of an unfounded pārājika offense:

- only two Vinayas indicate which offense a nun commits when she accuses a monk: according to the Mahī, it is a pāc.; according to the Dharma, it – possibly – is a saṃ. (just as when she accuses a monk).
- the Mahīśāsakas and the Mahāśāṅghikas (and possibly the Pāli tradition) judge a monk who accuses a monk and a monk who accuses a nun in a different way. This is not the case for the Dharmaguptakas for whom gender has no influence: regardless whether a monk falsely accuses a monk or a nun, he commits a saṃ.

2. a monk commits a pācittika offense if he slanders someone/a monk; a nun commits a pācittika offense if she slanders someone/a nun

The different schools further display the following information:

- Pāli tradition: a monk who slanders someone commits a pāc. (Vin, Vol.IV, p.6,5); the commentary adds that a monk who slanders a non-ordained person commits a dukkata (Skt. duṣkṛta) (Vin, Vol.IV, pp.10,29-11,2). Kankhāvitaranī,19 (D. Maskell (ed.), London, Pāli Text Society) p. 83, says that here also a nun has to be seen as a non-ordained person. This implies that a monk who slanders a nun commits a dukkata.
- pātimokkha for nuns: a nun who slanders commits a pāc. (Moniales, p.185: omasaṇāde, pācittiyām).

- Mahīśāsakas: a monk who slanders a monk commits a pāc. (Mahī, p.38a11); the commentary adds that a monk who slanders a nun commits a duṣkṛta and that a nun who slanders a nun or a monk commits a pāc. (Mahī, p.38a15-17).
- bhikṣunīvibhaṅga: a nun who slanders a nun commits a pāc. (Mahī, p.85b11-12).

- Mahāsāṃghikas: a monk who slanders someone commits a pāc. (Mahā, p.325b28-29); the commentary adds that a monk who slanders a nun commits a *sthūlātyaya*20 (Mahā, p.326b4-5).
- bhikṣuṇīvibhanga: a nun who slanders commits a pāc. (Mahā, p.527b18: only the key-word ‘to slander’).

- Dharmaguptakas: a monk who slanders someone commits a pāc. (Dharma, p.635b10 and following); the commentary adds that (also) a nun [in a similar situation] commits a pāc. (Dharma, p.636a5).21
- the above corresponds to the bhikṣuṇīvibhaṅga that says that a nun who slanders someone commits a pāc. (Dharma, p.734c12).22

- Sarvāstivādins: a monk who slanders someone commits a pāc. (Sarva, p.64b21-22); the commentary adds that a monk who slanders someone who is not a monk (and thus, theoretically, also a nun) commits a duṣkrta (Sarva, p.65c28-29).

- Mūlasarvāstivādins: a monk who slanders someone commits a pāc. (p.765b27 and following); the commentary does not give any further information.
- bhikṣuṇīvibhaṅga: a nun who slanders someone commits a pāc. (p.970a10 and following); the commentary adds many details on a nun who slanders a nun, but not on a nun who slanders a monk.

The above reveals that

- three Vinayas indicate which offense a nun commits when she slanders a monk: according to the Mahī, to the Dharma and to the Mūla, it is a pāc.. Yet, the commentary in the bhikṣuṇīvibhaṅga of the Mūla only gives details on a nun who slanders a nun.

- the Pāli tradition, the Mahīśāsakas, the Mahāsāṃghikas and the Sarvāstivādins judge a monk who slanders a monk and a monk who slanders a nun in a different way. This is not the case for the Dharmaguptakas and for the Mūlasarvāstivādins for whom gender seems to have no influence: regardless whether a monk slanders a monk or a nun, he commits a pāc..

---

20. lit. ‘a grave offense,’ an offense considered to be slightly lighter than a pārājika or a samghāvaśeṣa.
3. A monk commits a \textit{paccittika} offense if he tells about someone’s/a monk’s grave offense \textit{[parājika/saṅghāvaśeṣa]} to a non-ordained person; a nun commits a \textit{paccittika} offense if she tells about someone’s/a nun’s grave offense.

The different schools further display the following information:

- Pāli tradition: - a monk who tells about a monk’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Vin}, Vol.IV, p.31,12-14); - bhikkhunīpātimokkha: a nun who tells about a nun’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Moniales}, p.186).

- Mahīśasakas: - a monk who tells about a monk’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Mahā}, p.41a17-18); the commentary adds that a monk who tells about a nun’s grave offense commits a duṣkṛta and that a nun who tells about a nun’s or a monk’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Mahā}, p.41a21-22).

- Mahāsāṃghikas: - a monk who tells about a monk’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Mahā}, p.338a8-10); the commentary adds that a monk who tells about a nun’s grave offense commits a sthūlātīyaya (\textit{Mahā}, p.338a25-26).

- bhikṣunīvibhaṅga: a nun who tells about a nun’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Mahā}, p.527b20: only the key-words ‘to tell about a grave offense’).

- Dharmaguptakas: - a monk who tells about \textit{someone}’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Dharma}, p.639b26-28); since the commentary that follows upon the precept states that in case a monk tells about a grave offense of a person who is not a monk or a nun, he does not commit a pāc., but a duṣkṛta (\textit{Dharma}, p.639c6-7), we can deduce that the term ‘someone’ mentioned in the precept has to be interpreted as ‘a monk or a nun.’ The commentary further adds that (also) a nun [in a similar situation] commits a pāc. (\textit{Dharma}, p.639c9-10).23

- the above corresponds to the bhikṣunīvibhaṅga that says that a nun who tells about \textit{someone}’s grave offense, commits a pāc. (\textit{Dharma}, p.734c19-20).

- Sarvāstivādins: - a monk who tells about \textit{someone}’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Sarva}, p.72c10-11); the commentary only gives details on a monk who tells about a monk’s grave offense.

- bhikṣunīprātimokṣa: a nun who tells about a nun’s grave offense commits a pāc. (T.1437, p.482c22-23).

- Mūlasarvāstivādins: - a monk who tells about a monk’s grave offense commits a pāc. (\textit{Mūla}, p.773b28-29);

The above reveals that

- only two Vinayas indicate which offense a nun commits when she tells about a monk’s grave offense: according to the Mahī and to the Dharma, it is a pāc. Consequently, there is no difference between a nun who tells about a monk’s grave offense and a nun who tells about a nun’s grave offense.

- the Mahīśāsakas and the Mahāśāṁghikas judge a monk who tells about a monk’s grave offense and a monk who tells about a nun’s grave offense in a different way. This is not the case for the Dharmaguptakas for whom gender has no influence: regardless whether a monk tells about the grave offense of a monk or of a nun, he commits a pāc.

4. a monk commits a pācittika offense if he accuses someone/a monk of an unfounded samghāvaśeṣa offense; a nun commits a pācittika offense if she accuses someone/a nun of an unfounded samghāvaśeṣa offense

This precept is very similar to the one on the accusation of an unfounded pārājika offense. The different schools further display the following information:

- Pāli tradition: a monk who accuses a monk commits a pāc. (Vin, Vol.IV, p.148,5-6); the Pāli tradition does not give any further commentary; it is not unlikely, however, that the commentary on the precept on the accusation of an unfounded pār. offense also applies here.

- bhikkhuṇīpātimokkha: a nun who accuses a nun commits a pāc. (Moniales, p.190)

- Mahīśāsakas: a monk who accuses a monk commits a pāc. (Mahī, p.67b12-13); the commentary adds that a monk who accuses a nun commits a duṣkṛta and that a nun who accuses a monk or a nun commits a pāc. (Mahī, p.67b13-15).

- Mahāśāṁghikas: a monk who accuses a monk commits a pāc. (Mahā, p.395a8-9); the commentary adds that a monk who accuses a nun commits a sthālātyaya (Mahā, p.395a25-26).

- bhikkhuṇīvibhāṅga: a nun who accuses commits a pāc. (Mahā, p.527c12: only the key-words 'to falsely accuse of a sam.').
- Dharmaguptakas: a monk who accuses (someone) commits a pāc. (Dharma, p.689a21-22)\(^{24}\); the commentary does not say whether 'someone' is a monk or a nun; given the above mentioned commentary on the precept on the accusation of an unfounded pār., however, it is likely that we have to interpret 'someone' as 'a monk or a nun'. The commentary further says that (also) a nun [in a similar situation] commits a pāc. (Dharma, p.689b12-13).\(^{25}\)
- the above corresponds to the bhikṣunīvibhaṅga that says that a nun who accuses (someone) commits a pāc. (Dharma, p.736b19-20).

- Sarvāstivādins: a monk who accuses a monk commits a pāc. (Sarva, p.115b7-8).
  - bhikṣunīprātimokṣa: a nun who accuses a nun commits a pāc. (T.1437, p.484a11-12).

- Mūlasarvāstivādins: a monk who accuses a monk commits a pāc. (Mūla, p.852a9-10).
  - bhikṣunīvibhaṅga: a nun who accuses a nun commits a pāc. (Mūla, p.991b13-14).

The above reveals that
- only two Vinayas indicate which offense a nun commits when she accuses a monk: according to the Mahī and to the Dharma, it is a pāc.. Thus, in these two traditions, a nun commits a pāc. regardless whether she accuses a nun or a monk.
- the Mahīśasakas and the Mahāsāṃghikas (and possibly the Pāli tradition) judge a monk who accuses a monk and a monk who accuses a nun in a different way. This is not the case for the Dharmaguptakas for whom gender has no influence: regardless whether a monk falsely accuses a monk or a nun, he commits a pāc..

We can conclude that
- only two Vinayas indicate which offense a nun commits when she offends a monk. The Mahī says that a nun commits a pācittika if she uses a minor event to accuse a monk of an unfounded pārājika (whereas she commits a saṃghāvaśeṣa if she accuses a nun). This is analogous to the first precept on a false accusation. Also with regard to the other precepts, a nun commits a pācittika if she offends a monk. In these cases, however, there is no difference with \(^{24}\) Dharma, p.689a21-22: 若比丘瞋恚故以無根僧伽婆尸沙誣者波逸提.

\(^{25}\) Dharma, p.689b12-13: 比丘尼波逸提.
a nun who offends a nun. The Dharma makes no difference between a nun who offends a monk and a nun who offends a nun.

- the Mahiśasakas and the Mahāsaṃghikas (and possibly the Pāli tradition) judge a monk who offends a monk and a monk who offends a nun in a different way. This is not the case for the Dharmaguptakas for whom gender has no influence: regardless whether a monk offends a monk or a nun, he commits the same offense.

Consequently, throughout the Vinayas, a monk who has offended a nun, and a nun who has offended a monk are judged analogously to the above outlined case on the accusation of an unfounded pārahīka offense.

List of abbreviations

Mūla T.1442, 根本説一切有部毘奈耶, trans. 義浄 Yijing (bhikṣuvibhaṅga of the Mūlasarvāstivādins); T.1443: 根本説一切有部苾芻尼毘奈耶, trans. 義浄 Yijing (bhikṣunīvibhaṅga of the Mūlasarvāstivādins).

pāc. pācittika (Pāli: pācittiya) or variants

pār. pāraśīka or variants

saṃ. saṃghāvaśeṣa (Pāli: saṃghādisesa) or variants

Śarva T.1435, 十説律, trans. Punyatrabha / Punyatara, Kumārajīva, Dharmaruci and Vimalākṣa (SarvāstivādaVinaya)

Śp Buddhaghosa, Samantāpasādikā, J. Takakusu, M. Nagai and (Vols.5 and 7) K. Mizuno (editors) [1924-1947], London, Pāli Text Society, 7 Vols.

T.1437 十説比丘尼波羅提木叉戒本”, compilation 法顯 Faying (bhikṣunī-prātimokṣa of the Sarvāstivādins).